Three-Year-Old Law Partly Enforced, Though Police Court Was Jammed.

Court Was Jammed.

"They walked right out, turned around and walked right back again," That's what the "hangerson" in Police Court did yesterday morning when they were told to "bent it" by court officers who attempted to enforce the three-year-old ordinance prohibiting the admission or any spectator to the courtroom unless he had been summoned as a winers or was otherwise interested in any case. The oust despectators whose faces may be seen every morning in accustomed places while the court measures out justice by the yard, marched from the base-ment to the office of the Mayor, obtained permits to be present at the day's proceedings and returned to their usual seats in the small room which was already crowded by a host of witnesses and prisoners.

Justice Crutchfield explained yesterday afternoon that it was not up to him to enforce the auttpublic attendance ordinaines; that he had troubles of "his own in disposing of the hundred or so daily which come before him. But at all events, he gave directions to officers to be more strict to-day in enforcing the law, and he expects to secure better results.
